Comm-UNITY Garden

The Canton Museum of Art's Project Bloom, a mixed media flower garden installation and community art project, in partnership with Stark Community Foundation, was a multifaceted art project which created a community-inspired garden that celebrated the similarities and differences in all of us. Project Bloom was on-view at the Canton Museum of Art from February 5th, through March 5th, 2021 with over 1,500 blooms submitted and over 30 local schools and organizations participating.

“Our vision was to have flower art projects created from across our diverse community, sharing both beauty and the powerful messages of our own experiences, our hopes, our dreams, and what makes us unique, yet similar.”

- Max Barton, CMA Executive Director and CEO

Inspired by the exhibit, In the Garden: Nature's Beauty from the CMA Collection, children and adults from Stark County and the surrounding areas are encouraged to participate in flower making art projects included free art kits, a community art installation at the Canton Museum of Art, a virtual art exhibit, a virtual Family Day, an in-person Family Day, several free Project Bloom Art Workshops, a virtual unveiling celebration of the final installation, and more.

The Project Bloom free take home art kits (pictured right) included a variety of art materials, a companion packet filled with educational resources and hands-on art tutorials to help participants create several unique flowers. Flowers made for the art installation celebrated what makes each creator truly unique and makes them bloom.

Springing into 2021 presents a multitude of opportunities for hope, healing, and (he)ART, as we work together to move forward from the pandemic crisis that gripped the world. I am profoundly grateful for the support of our members, donors, visitors, and the broader audiences that have joined the CMA in a virtual world. I know we have reached hundreds of thousands with our programming, providing happiness, learning, and moments of pause.

My colleagues and I are pleased that, even in a limited capacity, so many joined us over the last three months for Dancing in the Light: Masterworks from the Age of American Impressionism – with visitors traveling from around the state and region! Cultural tourism is continuing, as is CMA's work in deepening the Museum's connection with our community as a place for creating hope through the inspiration of art.

Likewise, creativity brings healing, both mentally and physically. Our community's participation in Project Bloom (see page 2) demonstrated our resilience, our dreams, and our differences through insightful flower creations. Stories of what makes us each "bloom" delivered healing and strengthened individuals and families.

Our Spring exhibition season brings together a full complement of rich imagery and storytelling. Mort Künstler: "The Godfather" of Pulp Fiction Illustrators takes us into the golden era of pulp fiction action and adventure in the '50s and '60s, including a first look at Corleone Family from Mario Puzo's 1969 acclaimed crime novel, The Godfather. We've Got Issues brings artistic narratives to current events, social, and cultural issues through Myra Schuetter's highly involved, realistic, and colorful large-scale watercolors. In Tomorrow... An Unknown Quantity: The Art of Lee Kessler, CMA showcases the World War II experiences and stories of Canton native Kessler, alongside the MAPS Museum. Collection Gems: Celebrating 85 Years of CMA brings together favorites from the CMA staff and Volunteer Angels group, featuring insightful and personal narratives about the Collection.

At the (he)ART of it all is our audiences and the connection with art. Yes, exhibitions and related events will remain both in-person and virtual. But we are cautiously optimistic of returning with in-person classes this summer and fall, as well as increasing capacity for visitors.

Thank you for supporting us and each other. And please, donate to the ArtsInStark Annual Arts Campaign... see below. Art(s) strengthen and sustain our communities and our economy!

Sincerely,

Max R. Barton II

MORT KÜNSTLER

"THE GODFATHER" OF PULP FICTION ILLUSTRATION

INTERNATIONAL
ARTS AND ARTISTS

The Heckscher
Museum of Art

Mort Künstler is recognized as America's premier painter and chronicler of authentic American history, especially noted for his incomparable renderings of Civil War events. The artist began his career, however, as an illustrator during the golden age of pulp fiction books and magazines. His output during that period was so prolific that he operated under multiple pseudonyms, including "Martin Kay" and "Emmett Kaye," as magazine editors did not want the reading public to know that one illustrator was doing so much of the work. In a sense, he became "The Don" of illustrated pulp fiction, a title that alludes to that prodigious writer of pulp fiction, Mario Puzo, and his illustrious novel The Godfather. Puzo had a work ethic akin to Künstler's, and the two collaborated on many assignments during their years working for Magazine Management Company, Inc. Künstler created the original visuals for Puzo's Mafia saga, which influenced future depictions of Vito Corleone, including Marlon Brando's iconic portrayal of The Don in the 1972 Oscar-winning film The Godfather. Indeed, Brando's onscreen appearance owes its origins to Künstler's first renderings of Corleone, made years before his cinematic debut. The Künstler/Puzo collaboration was characteristic of the working method of the pulp fiction industry, which paired writers and illustrators who could bring out the best in each other. Künstler and Puzo were giants in their respective fields even before their celebrated partnership. Puzo created "true" stories, which in fact were not always so true, while Künstler excelled at heart-pounding imagery that, on a crowded magazine rack, seduced the reader's eye with dramatic and often provocative cover art.

Mort Künstler: "The Godfather" of Pulp Fiction Illustrators features more than 80 original illustrations by Künstler that enlivened the covers and pages of American paperback books and magazines such as True, Argosy, Stag, For Men Only, Male, Adventure, and Saga, throughout the pulp heyday of the 1950s and '60s. Most of these illustrations are being exhibited publicly for the first time, and their subjects are wide-ranging and unabashedly action-packed: military conflicts, criminal heists, Cold War espionage, man against nature, and much more. Nobody captured hard-boiled action better than Mort Künstler. His illustrations embody the very essence of the pulp era.

Mort Künstler: "The Godfather" of Pulp Fiction Illustrators was organized by the Heckscher Museum of Art, Huntington, NY and is toured by International Arts & Artists, Washington, DC

We've Got Issues

Myna Schuetter

Myna Schuetter is a native of Jasper, Indiana, and has been working in this particular style of watercolor for about 40 years. Her highly involved, realistic, and colorful large scale paintings are full of thought and meaning. Much of the detail centers around small action figures and toys who help tell the story. Often, the topics of current events, politics, social and cultural issues and persistent biases are represented in her imagery. In every painting, there is a lot going on, both in detail, color and in a multitude of objects to relay the message behind the work.

FROM THE ARTIST:

“I use realism, along with the scale of my work, to not only draw in the viewer, but to keep their interest long enough to recognize that there is much more going on than what originally appeared to them. I consider realism another tool to draw in the viewer, keep their attention and get them to think about the issues that are being presented.”

“I choose to work in transparent watercolor, a decidedly non-traditional medium for such large and complex compositions. I feel that by using watercolor, I have control of all stages of transparency from light and airy color to fully intense color. Watercolor allows me to render bright, shiny highlights and deep shadows without layers of paint that might intrude upon the flatness of the paper surface and be distracting. Color placement, contrast between light and dark, and my attention to detail make the key pieces of the still life stand out and demand attention. So therefore, realism creates a sort of comfort zone. Using watercolor keeps the paint itself from being a distraction and lets me really get into the detail. The use of little figures and toys helps convey a message and I have such fun doing it!”

An Unknown Quantity

The artwork of Lee Kessler

Lee Kessler was born in Canton, Ohio, on May 25, 1921. Lee was 20 years old when the attack at Pearl Harbor occurred during World War II. He knew that given his age, there was no doubt he would be drafted in a year. However, due to his self-proclaimed, "impulsive patriotism", he wanted to enlist early for the opportunity to get into the Air Corps and airplanes. If he had to go, he felt he should at least have his choice at what he wanted. Since he was only 20 years old, his parents had to sign for his enlistment.

Kessler had been sketching portraits in the evenings for something to do, so when a Sergeant asked if there were any artists among the outfit, he was quickly pointed out. His job was to make "wet paint" signs while the other guys marched in line outside in the cold. He decided he wanted to milk the job as long as he could and he said he "made the most beautiful signs they had ever seen".

Kessler attended Gunnery School in Las Vegas, Nevada, and was one of the first combat crewmen assigned to the 306th Bomb Group at Wendover, Utah. It was at Wendover when he was told to report to the squadron commander who asked if he could paint a B-17 Flying Fortress on the wall behind his office desk. Kessler was told he could order whatever he would need and using an advertisement from Life Magazine, painted the mural. The mural was the first step in his journey of becoming the artist for the 368th Bomb Squadron.

Bail Out, n.d. Lee Kessler (American 1921-1950). Acrylic on canvas On loan from Jim Kessler.

Friday May 21, 1943 Wilhelmshaven Germany 13.02 Hours, n.d. Lee Kessler (American 1921-1950). Acrylic on canvas On loan from MAPS Air Museum.

It could all have ended suddenly when his B-17 “Melton Pot” crashed on its trans-Atlantic flight just off the coast of Northern Ireland. This was only the first of four plane crashes Kessler experienced, leading him to later have a bumper sticker on his van that read “I’ve survived damn near everything!”. Upon the crew’s rescue, they joined the rest of their outfit in Prestwick, Scotland before continuing on to Thurleigh in England.

It was during this time that Kessler began to work on the squadron “nose art”. Pilots would come and ask him to paint a picture of something on the nose of their plane. If they had no idea, Kessler would create a design and if they approved, he went with it. The first plane he had painted was the “Eager Beaver”. It became the most popular and flew to the end of the war. The nose with the painting by Kessler, is on display at the National Museum of the Mighty Eighth Air Force in Pooler, Georgia. Other planes were “Montana Power”, “Seelos Sleeper”, “Grim Reaper”, and “Yankee Raider”- all of which were shot down and destroyed during the war.

On April 17, 1943, the B-17, “Little Savage”, in which he was the turret gunner was badly shot up and he was the only one from his squadron to return to base. Only a month later on May 21, 1943 on his 19th raid, the B-17 he was on was shot down over Wilhelmshaven, Germany. Kessler worked to get other crewmen out of the stricken plane as they were forced to bail out. He was captured immediately by Germany military. Lee spent nine days at Dulag Luft Interrogation Center before he was sent to Stalag 7A Moosberg, then to Stalag 17B in Krems, Austria. Kessler was forced to march west before he was liberated in the woods by a tank division of Patton’s 3rd Army on May 2, 1945.

After the war, Lee continued to produce a wide range of artwork, much of which depicted scenes he encountered during his service overseas. His artwork is featured on the cover for the 306th Bomb Group history book “First Over Germany” and he volunteered time at MAPS Air Museum where he repainted and retouched nose art on aircraft. He wrote an autobiographical account of his life from the time of enlistment through liberation titled “Tomorrow...An Unknown Quantity”. Excerpts from this book can be found throughout the exhibit.

Collection Gems

Celebrating 85 Years of CMA

Lockhart, 1972. Jerome Witkin (American, Born 1939). Oil on canvas, 66 x 96 in.
Purchased by the Canton Museum of Art with a Matching Fund Grant from National Endowment for the Arts, 73.21

For its 85th anniversary, one of the Canton Museum of Art's philanthropic groups, the Volunteer Angels, along with CMA's staff, has chosen their favorite highlights from CMA Collection, displayed in this exhibit – Collection Gems: Celebrating 85 Years of CMA. Each work includes detail about the piece and why it is a “Collection Gem” to the person who selected it.

Established in the late 1930s, the focus of CMA's Collection is American works on paper from the 19th century forward, with an emphasis on watercolors, and American ceramics from the 1950s through today. With more than 1,500 select pieces, the Museum's Collection ranks as one of the finest in Ohio.

Included in the CMA Collection are American masters of watercolor such as Andrew Wyeth, Edward Hopper, Winslow Homer, John Singer Sargent, Childe Hassam, and Charles Burchfield, in addition to important oils, prints, drawings, and other works by Andy Warhol, Clyde Singer, Julian Stanczak, Roy Lichtenstein, and Thomas Hart Benton among others. Periods represented range from Impressionism and Realism to American Regionalism, Abstract Expressionism, Contemporary, and more.

Artists such as Viktor Schreckengost, Toshiko Takaezu, Peter Voulkos, and Viola Frey are important figures in the Museum's ceramic holdings. Reflecting the Ohio region's richness in ceramics, including the influence of Cleveland School artists and Cowan Pottery, CMA's Collection provides exciting opportunities for discovery.

An Interesting Book, 1890. Claude Raguet Hirst (American, 1855 - 1942).

Purchased by the Canton Museum of Art with funds from the Doran Foundation in memory of Edward A. and Rosa J. Langenbach, 998.1

Through its Collections focus on American watercolors and ceramics, the Canton Museum of Art has selected a unique identity among museums in Northeast Ohio. The Museum's Collections are central to fulfilling its mission – to be a place “where art meets life, providing opportunities for everyone to discover, explore, learn, and be inspired by a connection with art.” About the Canton Museum of Art and its collection, Akron Beacon Journal art reviewer Anderson Turner wrote in 2016:

“The Canton Museum of Art does an exceptional job of sharing its collection with the public and providing timely and interesting programming ...”

The Canton Museum of Art will continue to build upon the artistic excellence of its acclaimed collections, to share its stories within our community and visitors, and to be gracious caretakers of the wonder that is contained within each work of art. At the close of its 85th anniversary season, it is with great pride that the Volunteer Angels and staff of CMA celebrate all that Collection has to offer with this exhibition, featuring works by several of the acclaimed American artists named here.
